The Reporting Wiki is a web-based, collaborative project developed and supported by the Executive Agency for Higher Education, Research, Development & Innovation Funding from Romania. As the name indicates, a wiki technology for developing collaborative websites is being used, allowing registered members to work together and develop texts that are to be included in evaluation reports. The Reporting Wiki employs an open editing model where every text may be created or edited by any registered user, and changes to an existing text become instantly available without review.

The Reporting Wiki allows for transparency during the evaluation process. Non-members who are stakeholders of university evaluation (university managers, academics, students) may observe the report as it is developed. Consequently, they may send feedback to actors involved in evaluation, thus influencing the way in which an evaluation report is being developed. The reporting process moves away from the linear evolution, becoming a backward-forward motion gradually integrating knowledge.
